CRITICAL THINKING FOR PROBLEM SOLVING
Critical thinking and problem solving are the top employability skills in an increasingly automated world. Employers are looking for professionals who are able to think independently, evaluate complex flows of information quickly, and make decisions in uncertain environments. Critical thinking enables us to deal with unprecedented situations, solve complex problems, and make sound decisions with greater clarity and confidence.

Critical thinking minimises rework, enhances productivity, and helps to reduce stress in the workplace. Research shows that companies that invested in staff critical thinking training experienced considerable improvement in employee performance and return on investment. In this interactive and practical workshop, participants will be building their own critical and design thinking toolbox that can be used when ‘tried and tested’ approaches no longer work.

LEADING WITH STRATEGIC FORESIGHT
In a complex and uncertain business environment a major challenge is to lead with strategic agility and foresight. The characteristics that make strategic leaders stand out is their ability to anticipate change, use their insight to spot opportunities, and actively shape the future of the organisation they lead.

A global study of 35 countries indicated that the ability to think and act strategically is the most valuable attribute of effective business leaders. Research shows that employees value strategic thinking as the most effective leadership quality; twice as important as communication. Leading strategically requires a strategic mindset, forward thinking, and the ability to make sound choices to place the organisation ahead of competition.

This workshop focuses on enhancing strategic thinking and strategic leadership skills. The program is designed to enable leaders to think more clearly about future challenges and design an action plan to drive business growth.
