Publication manual of the American Psychological Association

Mori, K. (2016). Swinburne Online APA 6th edition referencing style guide.

1. The purpose of the APA Style

APA Style is an academic citation system that allows you to use and then acknowledge other people's information and ideas in your own work. Using APA Style ensures that people who read your work can locate and read the same sources you used. It also reduces the risk of being accused of plagiarism.

Using APA Style means acknowledging the author of an information source and the date the source was published by inserting the author's family name/surname and year of publication in the body of your work each time you use their information and ideas. The author and date, together with other details (often called bibliographic details) are also listed at the end of your work. If you use more than one information source, arrange the sources in a list at the end of your work alphabetically by author surname.

Always be consistent when using APA Style. All information sources of the same type should be treated in the same way.

This guide supplements but does not replace the sixth edition of the publication manual of the American Psychological Association (APA 2010).

Students are advised to check with their school, department or faculty which citation style guide is required, as not everyone in the University uses this style guide.

2. Acknowledging sources in the body of your work; to paraphrase and to quote

The two most important details to acknowledge whenever you use someone's information are: a) the name(s) of the author, authors or organisation who created it, and b) the year they created it. You must insert them each time you use their information in your own work. The details are usually placed at the end of the sentence and are called 'in-text references', because you are placing them in the text (the body) of your work.

The two main ways of using an information source are either to paraphrase it or to quote from it. To paraphrase is to look at someone's information and then write it using your own words. To quote is to use the exact words someone has written and insert it into your work. You should only quote when you feel that the author's words are perfect and that trying to paraphrase them would weaken their message and power. When you quote, always include the page number or page numbers in the in-text reference, placed after the year it was published. When you quote less than 40 words, enclose the text in double quotation marks: ". If you quote more than 40 words, then do not use double quotation marks – instead, place the quoted material on a new line, indent the quote and finish with the in-text reference. New text after that quote should start on a new line and not be indented.

For example, this sentence from a book: Volunteer programmes are successful when volunteers are working in positions they look forward to undertaking and want to fill.

If you copy it from the book and insert it into your work, the in-text reference could look like this:

"Volunteer programmes are successful when volunteers are working in positions they look forward to undertaking and want to fill" (McCurley, Lynch, & Jackson, 2012, p. 78).

If you paraphrase it by rewriting the information using your own words, the sentence and the in-text reference could look like this:

If the volunteers are employed in roles that they want to do, then the volunteer programmes will perform well (McCurley, Lynch, & Jackson, 2012).

Although page numbers are not necessary when paraphrasing, they are encouraged, especially when it helps a reader find the passage in the text.

If the author of the work is very well known in their subject field, you may want to use their name as part of your writing. If you do so, you must still include the year of publication (and the page number too, if you are quoting or paraphrasing them). For example:

Dawkins (2012, p. 226) states that the universe cannot do good or bad things to humans because it is not a sentient force.

If a source does not have a page number (some sources, such as webpages and YouTube videos, do not), just insert the author's name and year of publication. If a source has section numbers instead of page numbers (eg. some ebooks; legislation), use 's' (short for section) instead of 'p' (short for page) and list the section number in the in-text reference.

You can still make an in-text reference even if an information source doesn't have an author (check carefully first, though). The author is replaced by the title of the information source, and the title is also italicised. Year of publication and page number are unchanged. For example:

Decapsulation of brine shrimp cysts is not necessary but has been carried out by dedicated aquarists for many years as they claim it improves hatching rates (Hatching and raising brine shrimp 2010).

3. Your Reference List or Bibliography

Each time you find a useful information source, keep a record of all its bibliographic details. As well as author and year, other bibliographic details might include the name of the company who published the source; the state, town or suburb; the edition number if the source is not the first; the web address (if you found it on the web), and the date that you first found it (if you found it on the web); and other details depending on the type of source. These details all help someone locate and read the same information source you used. These bibliographic details, arranged in the correct order, are called an entry. Arrange entries in a single alphabetical list, alphabetically by author surname/family name. Each entry should be double-spaced and have a hanging indent. This list is either a Reference List or a Bibliography and it is placed at the end of your work.

A Reference List is a list of all the information sources you refer to in your work. A Bibliography is a list of all the information sources you refer to in your work as well as all other sources you have looked at while preparing your work, but did not actually use in it. Ask your course convenor which one they require; in most cases it will be a Reference List.

4. Books: bibliographic details required

For books, include the details in this order:

1. Author(s) – either a person(s) or an organisation – or editor(s). Names are presented surname first, initial(s) stop next.
2. (Year of publication) in brackets.
3. Title – plus the subtitle, if there is one. Place a colon between the title and subtitle. Both are italicised.
4. Title of series and volume number, if applicable.

5. Edition – include only if this is not the first edition of the book. Edition is abbreviated in the entry as (3rd ed.).
6. Place of publication – state or city or suburb. Extra information may be provided if there is more than one place with the same name.
7. Publisher.

For example:

5. Articles from magazines and journals (except those freely available on official magazine or journal web sites): bibliographic details required

Many students obtain newspaper, magazine and journal articles via Swinburne Library databases. Some extra details (like a doi) are required for those compared to articles found in print sources (eg.. a newspaper purchased in a shop):

1. Author(s) – if given.
2. Year of publication (in brackets).
3. Title of article.
4. Title of newspaper/magazine/journal. Title should be italicised.
5. Volume and/or issue number. If there is an issue number, it should be in brackets. Please note that issue numbers are not required for journals that continue page numbers across issue numbers in a given volume.
6. Day and month, or season in brackets– if volume and/or issue number are not provided, or if needed to precisely identify an article.
7. Page number(s), if they are included. Note: this is not an estimate of how many printed pages would result from printing the article, but the page numbers given in the database.

8. DOI. If you are referencing an article from a library database the doi (document object identifier) needs to be included. If no doi is available, write Retrieved from and include the URL. You can shorten the URL.

For example:

6. Information from the web: recommendation

Information sources found on the web can sometimes be difficult information sources to acknowledge and create entries for. Carefully examine the guidelines and examples at the APA Style webpage - you may find an example there that matches what you are trying to acknowledge. You can also build a hybrid entry by combining the guidelines for books and for other sources. For more information about hybrid entries and an example of one, see Section 8.

7. Information from the web: bibliographic details required

Include as many of the following details in the entry as possible:

1. Author(s) or organisation responsible for the webpage – if given. If there is no clearly identifiable author, do not use the name of the Copyright owner or website host/website sponsor, as they may not be the same organisation. If no author can be found, then use the title, and the title should be italicised.
2. Year the information was created or year of the most recent update. Use the Copyright date of a webpage if there is no date of creation. If a range of dates is given (e.g. © 2010 – 2012), use the latest date shown. If there is no date available, use n.d.. (Short for no date).
3. Title of the webpage/document. The page title is usually shown at or near the top of the page.
4. Name of the organisation hosting the webpage on their website or the name of the sponsor of the webpage. Do not confuse a group hosting or sponsoring a webpage with the author, unless they clearly are the same.
5. URL. The URL (website address) should be included with the prefix “retrieved from”.

Example of an entry for a web page from an organisation:

8. Hybrid entries

If you need to blend guidelines to create a hybrid entry for an unusual information source, remember: always be consistent in the application of APA throughout your work.

Here are the steps showing how to create a hybrid entry, in this instance an entry for an Annual Report found on a company website:

The details required by the guidelines for Annual Reports: Name of organisation, Year of publication in brackets, Short descriptive title (italicised), and Year(s) covered) are collected, and then some of the guidelines for web sources (Name of the group hosting the webpage, and URL are collected. The two are then blended together to make the following hybrid entry:

9. Image example – from a webpage.

Include as many of the following:

1. Author(s), or creator(s) of the image
2. Year the image was created
3. Title of the image in italics.
4. Format of the image. e.g. photograph. Put this information in [square] brackets.
5. URL. The URL can be shortened. Preface the URL with “Retrieved from.”
